Illinois is the fifth largest state in the country with 12.4 million people. In 2000, the population increased by almost 9 or about one million people in the past decade. About 12% of the state's population is age 65 and older. 1.5 million people in 2000 by 2025 the Illinois elderly population is expected to increase by over 50% and will be 16.6% of the state's total population. Illinois is one of the few states in the country that provides older persons and younger adults who meet the eligibility criteria with state entitlements to home and community-based long-term care services. Both entitlements resulted from court cases that were brought to eliminate waiting lists for services the state funds. The community care program for older adults and the home services program for persons with physical disabilities with a combination of state general revenue funds and Medicaid Section 1915(c) waiver funds the community care program. Uses contracted agencies for the provision of homemaker, adult day care services and case management services. In contrast, the home services program relies primarily on personal assistants whom consumers supervise to provide services. According to state officials, in 2002 the state had about 3,000 people with developmental disabilities in state-operated development centers, 6,500 people in private intermediate care facilities for the mentally retarded (ICFs/MR) and 8,800 people in Section 1915(c) Medicaid home and community-based services waivers for the developmentally disabled.

Florida has the largest proportion of elderly in the nation. 2.8 million persons are over age 65 representing 17.6% of its total population. The dramatic rise in the number of persons age 65 and over in Florida over the next 20 years estimated to total 26.3% of total population will further stretch the already limited resources of the state. Aware of the pressing demand for long-term care services well into the 21st century, policymakers in Florida have begun seriously to review options for improving financing and delivery of long-term care for the frail elderly and persons with disabilities. Federal and state Medicaid spending in Florida was 2.6 billion in FY2001 and 30.5% of Medicaid spending was for long-term care. In FY2001, 75.3% of total Medicaid spending was for institutional care, slightly less than 25% of Medicaid spending was channeled towards home and community-based services. Although institutional care dominated Medicaid spending, there has been slow but steady expansion of home and community-based services funding both through the use of Medicaid's waiver programs as well as significant support through state sources. Among the major issues facing long-term care in Florida are the fragmentation of long-term care services among state and local agencies, an imbalance in financing that favors institutional care rather than home and community-based care, shortage of health care workers and well-trained staff throughout the long-term care and disparities in availability of services across the state.

this book provides a solid foundation on which to build expertise understand the differences and similarities among the many long term services how the various segments of long term care fit together to form an overall system and the skills needed to succeed in that system
